

To The Point(e)

Land-locked in Idaho, far from the sea, I could not hear the hushed waves of the Puget Sound echoing their melodious refrain. Thankfully, my husband had heard their song as a little boy and yearned to return to the enchantment of the sea, the alluring mountains, the lush forests, and the azure skies.

My husband had grown up spending weekends with family and friends in their beach house on Treasure Island (also known as Reach Island). His dream was for our family to create beach memories of our own as he had done years before.

It took a year of searching, from Port Ludlow to south Puget Sound, to find the perfect location for our family. Early on, we discovered that Port Ludlow was too far away for a weekend respite from Portland, Oregon so we narrowed our search to the south end of the Sound.

One, beautiful, spring day our family decided to take a drive throughout the south end of Puget Sound. We turned off of Highway 3, on to Pickering Road and then crossed over the bridge to Harstine Island and turned left at the stop sign.

Much like Shel Silverstein's book, "Where The Sidewalk Ends," we discovered where the road ends. We came to an abrupt stop in front of a wrought iron gate that led into the land where enchantment begins...

At the gate a friendly voice from inside a little, black box informed us that we needed a realtor to enter the gated community. We contacted a realtor from Grapeview and together we explored the Pointe.

My husband drove very slowly as I sat in the back seat cranking my head from side-to-side in search of for sale signs. As we rounded the corner from Pointes Drive East I saw a sign tucked back in the bushes. I told my husband that I had seen a sign and we drove into the cul-de-sac.

We couldn't wait to get out of the car to check out the property and the house. The realtor couldn't get the key in the lock fast enough for us to look inside. The moment we walked through the door we all loved it. The views of the Olympic Mountains and Pickering Passage took our breath away, as they still do to this day.

At the same time we were looking for a house on the Sound, my husband's mother was selling her house on Treasure Island. When we compared her house with the house on the Pointe we considered the ages of our children and all of the amenities that the Pointe had to offer and that is why we chose to purchase the house on the Pointe.

There were so many aspects of living on the Pointe that we enjoyed. As a home owner we shared miles of beaches, trails, and roads. We could walk on the beach when the tide was out, or along the trail, above the beach, if the tide was in, or we could walk on the road. No matter where we chose to walk we beheld beauty all around us.

We loved to build a fire on the spit and roast hot dogs and marshmallows under the stars. We would swirl our sticks in the black, salty water as the phosphorescent, one-celled organisms glowed and held us captive with their magical dance.

Early morning breakfasts on the beach were a special treat as we carried all the fixings to the cabana, which provided many of the conveniences of home, as well as a roof over our heads. We watched the sun rise with bald eagles playfully soaring over the glass-like water only to see the sky transform in to a spectrum of colors.

We discovered that people of all ages and walks of life lived on the Pointe and the activities were just as diverse as the people. Whether or not you participated was your choice, but the invitation was extended to everyone. Life-long friendships were made with people who visited, or lived on the Pointe from all over the world.

Seventeen years ago we discovered where the road ends and the land of enchantment begins, here at the Pointe of caring. We also discovered that no matter how far away we lived, it was always waiting, with open arms, for our return, which is why we still choose to come, to the Pointe!
